Spirits and Mixed Drinks

The inspiration for our restaurant's drinking culture comes from the ceremonial act of enjoying aperitivi and then digestivi on either side of the meal. We believe in the benefits of this Italian ritual and encourage you to enhance your dining experience by taking part.

T A B L E S I D E D I G E S T I V I

Long before modern medicine, people discovered the healing qualities of herbalism. Ancient Romans began infusing distillates with different combinations of herbs, roots, vegetables and fruits to achieve specific restorative properties. As time continued, families and monasteries closely guarded their recipes and began selling their tonics and elixirs in pharmacies. In Italy these elixirs came to be known as “amaro,” which translates to “bitter.”

Much like wine, amaro has a sense of time and place. Where it was made will dictate the ingredients used in the liqueur; and only recently has the production of amari been brought into the modern world. It wasn't so long ago that each bottling was a unique expression of the person that made it.

As integral to the Italian meal as wine is to the food, it is just as important to end the meal with a digestivo. We invite you to take part in the ritual of enjoying digestivi through a unique tasting of a vintage amaro, side by side with their modern expression.
